Cookies

What are cookies?

Cookies are widely-used, small text files stored on a visitor's computer. They are designed to hold small amounts of data about the visitor for a variety of purposes:

- Analysis of visitor behaviour (e.g Google Analytics)
- To deliver tailored page content
- To manage shopping carts
- Delivering targeted advertising
- Logging in to protected areas

How does this site use cookies?

There are three types of cookies used on this website. The first are those that are strictly necessary and enable you to browse between pages. The second are for tracking visitor statistics and advertising campaigns (used for tracking visitor statistics and advertising campaigns, specifically this site uses Google Analytics). The third are used in the blog section of this site, these are 'third-party' cookies for social media.

You should check the relevant third-party website for more information about these.

We do not sell any of the information collected in our cookies or pass any of the information on to third-parties.
